Chapter 1 by paul arce

The smell of the musty steel filled the nose of the man. He was chained in hulls of a boat, and was freezing. A loud clang rang through the boat and the yells of sailors filled the air. "ABANDON SHIP!!!" A sailor ran down below deck, and grabbed the man. They ran through the ship, and jumped onto the lifeboats. the boat driifted out to sea, when a heavy storm started. they threw the man overboard and shot him. the blood flew out through his leg, and the sharks started to circle.

Chapter 2 by Nate Gardner

Sharks circling around his bleeding leg. Waves as tall as buildings crashing all around him. Lightning dancing around the ocean surface, threatening to fry everything in sight.

Yes, he was going to die. He knew when and where. The only question left was how. Was he going to go out as a helpless victim, overwhelmed by the odds? Or was he going to go out fighting, bringing his enemies down with him?

The sharks advanced, some of them taking closer passes at him, trying to gauge his defenses. Grimacing, he stuck a finger in the hole in his leg and extracted the bullet. It was bent at the edge a little, but it would still fire again. He put the bullet in his pocket.

He was saving it for someone special.
